Reason for the field safety corrective action (FSCA)

1. description of the product problem

Danger due to loosening of the polyimide inner catheter proximal to the crown marker of the TENTOS 4F stent system.

2. Hazard that leads to FSCA

Due to insufficient elasticity of the polyimide inner catheter, there is a risk of failure at the transition from the proximal crown marker to the filler material. After release of the stent, this can lead to loosening of the inner structure distal to the transition from the crown marker to the filler material. The possible consequence is that this inner structure detaches and remains in the vessel, which could cause complications.

Based on investigations of the inner catheter raw material and the inner structure of the application system, it was possible to identify the raw material batches that, due to their low elongation at break, could potentially lead to the above-described failure of the inner structure.

The raw material batches with the lowest values also lead to the most frequent complaints.

3. Probability of occurrence of the problem

Potentially possible at any time

4. Expected risk for patients/users

May lead to loss of product components
